

Joshua Reads The Opening of Lucretius Book One - 1743 Edition

Post by "Cassius" of November 6, 2019 at 8:24 AM

Joshua has done some great reading for this video!

Please thank Joshua for the time he invested in this, and let's also discuss something that might help as we make more of these in the future:

In this reading from the opening of Lucretius Book 1, Joshua uses three distinct voices. I'm calling them "normal," "audiobook," and "dramatic/Shakespearean."

We frequently find that some people like the dramatic voice for short periods, but find it tiring over time. Each version has advantages in terms of clarity and emphasis. As we work to produce more and longer videos, please let us know in which voice you think you would most enjoy listening to longer selections from Lucretius.

So please "vote" and also "comment" to let us know your thoughts:

https://youtu.be/Fdhcj_K_2Gc