

Tom Stoppard on Human Rights

Post by "Cassius" of December 11, 2019 at 12:56 PM

Yes I agree that it rings that way, although I think probably the deeper implications are buried under the words "know" and "knowledge" which are probably not the exact Epicurean framework.

Possibly would be more accurate to say that children "feel" what is fair and unfair, or at the view stems from an "anticipation" that is there from the beginning rather than being something that is affirmatively "known" as if assembled from conscious thought or consideration.

And then there would need to be a discussion of whether what is being dealt with here really constitutes "human rights" or something else....