

Discussion of the Society of Epicurus' 20 Tenets of 12/21/19

Unless and until someone starts "campaigning" against a core Epicurean position, as far as I am concerned there is definitely a place here for anyone who wants to discuss the study of Epicurus in good faith. What we frequently run into Mike are confirmed Stoics or others who are already set in their ways against some core Epicurean viewpoint, and all they want to do is argue against clear Epicurean positions for fun. Lots of people seem to have fun that way. Anyone who gets close to crossing that line would be warned by the moderators well in advance of taking any other action. At some point in the future we might also set up moderation rules to require pre-approval of posts from totally new people before they go "live," but we're not at that point yet. And you're not totally new, and all your posts are constructive, so you would already be elevated past "new user" level when we implement new categories. We'll deal with all these issues by moderation procedures that make clear to any offenders what the problem is before any removal action is taken.

All of your posts have been very constructive and as far as I am concerned it is very proper that you are here. We aren't in the business of "judging" anyone as a person, we're just evaluating posts as they come in and trying to build a like-minded community.
