

On Syllogisms And the Differences Between Aristotle/Plato and Epicurus

Post by "Cassius" of April 9, 2020 at 10:07 AM

Theo Kouk i think the difference in epistemology brings the difference in ontology. aristotle says that only reason can decide what is true and exists. yes, we take information from experience but it is abstract reasoning which lead us to truth. I think an epicurean would despise this idea. abstract reasoning is good as long as it returns to experience.

Love · Reply · 17h

ink this person participates

Cassius Amicus Thank you Theo the other answers are good too but you have articulated my precise concern, and the ultimate point I think DeLacy was making. And I want to especially say that I agree with your choice of the word "despise." In my own case it is possible that "despise" is too gentle a term.

Like · Reply · 2m · Edited