

Responding to the Arguments Against Pleasure In Cicero's "On Ends" Book 2

I agree that to be without pain is enough to constitute good life. Because:

Quote

"Our every action is done so that we will not be in pain or fear. As soon as we achieve this, the soul is released from every storm, since a living being has no other need and must seek nothing else to complete the goodness of body and soul. Thus we need pleasure only when we are in pain caused by its absence; but when we are not in pain then we have no need of pleasure."
