i just finished reading Martin's comments and I too thank him for all the time he put in. As Martin indicates some of the comments are more significant than others but they all point out passages where at the very least clarification might be in order, so I think they will be valuable to Haris.

I agree with Martins comments on the issues as to the natural and necessary categories and i also agree that regardless of any issues in these details the overall presentation of the philosophy that Harris gives is much more faithful to the big picture than most other "modern" works.
