

Episode Thirty-Four - The Atoms Do Not Possess A Faculty of Sensation

I completely concur with Cassius . Even if atoms arranged themselves in an identical *pattern* to us, it wouldn't be us. Death is the dissolution of this particular "incarnation" of consciousness. Death is a break. *I* will not exist after I die. There will be no sensation, and so death will be nothing to me. If an arrangement of atoms assembles into this pattern again, that's not *me.*

Monkeys may type Shakespeare, but they're not Shakespeare.

The pattern may copy me, but that's not me.
