

Pleasure over truth

Post by “Mathitis Kipouros” of September 15, 2020 at 11:22 PM

Quote from Cassius

As far as the second sentence goes it would probably be better to ask you to restate that to make it more clear.

What I meant is that truth is not valuable in itself, it just is ; but our decision to honor (that is, recognizing its importance, and think of it highly and respecting it highly, thus, perhaps, trying to communicate it regardless of circumstances) the truth of something could be less or more valuable to us depending on the situation, and using the criteria of pleasure. In the hypothetical scenario of this post, honoring it is of little value; but in other situations, some of them already stated in this thread, this value is higher.