

"Facts don't care about your feelings."

I think your distinction between an opinion and a "feeling"/reaction is important. That's the ambiguity of the word "feeling" that I'm struggling with. I cannot endorse "truthiness" or "going with your gut." But from what I'm reading from you and Godfrey is that we use our initial reaction as one criteria in concert with others + reason to bring it all together.

Am I getting closer?

Thanks for taking the time to engage me on this.
