

Registered user private conversations

Post by “Kalosyni” of March 9, 2023 at 8:04 AM

Registered users please check to see if you have received a private conversation message (see below for how to do so). It appears that the private conversations option is not optimized when using your cell phone for viewing the forum.

Almost all discussions are held on the public forum, because we all benefit from philosophizing together as a community.

However the forum does give an option for private conversations.

Private conversations are most often used to announce Zoom meeting links and updates.

If you are a registered user and you are using your cell phone to read the forum, please be aware that the private conversations notification is indicated by a red dot on your round profile icon. You need to click on your profile icon which will open your "User Menu" and then click on "Conversations".

Let us know if you have any further questions. 😊

Post by “Kalosyni” of June 26, 2024 at 8:49 AM

I don't know if there is a glitch in the software, but at times it appears that private conversations (private messages) go "unread"... and there could be one of the following causes:

1. The android version of the forum doesn't make it very obvious when there is a new private conversation...and either the notification isn't seen or it isn't even showing a notification.
2. The individual is "ignoring" the little red dot that indicates that there is a new message.
3. The message has been read, but the system is registering it as "unread".

So...just a heads up to newer members...to double-check for new private conversations. 😊